Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, October 8, 2013 – 10:00 a.m.

Time is following its course, inexorably, and humanity continues its journey. As the days go by, one gains experience, but is it taken into account? One's mistakes and successes constitute this current incarnation's gains which will be decisive for each one's evolution. Will the results be satisfactory? Many of our brothers and sisters are trying to take stock of their life experience; some aspects are reassuring, others are less so. Following a spiritual approach transforms their lives; they try to assimilate it, to understand the need to rid themselves of what is unnecessary. There lies an important point: an incarnation is short in the face of eternity – time is therefore counted, and very precious. The goal to be reached is there; it becomes clearer to them, and for some this can completely change their lifestyle. It is said that every moment counts. Trying to do one's best, taking ownership of one's destiny and conforming with what is beneficial for oneself are signs of wisdom.

Our Mission does not lack these brave hearts – many of them work in the background, but with passion and love, in the service of this beautiful and great cause that contributes to the elevation of humankind. Being committed for one's own sake and for the sake of the Mission is a great endeavour, one might say. Many human beings are searching, but not all are truly aware of this; they feel a void, a lack within themselves, without being able to really define it. One day, the light dawns in them. They are brought face to face with reality, and they understand the need to truly embark on the path that suits them. This need will be felt more and more; it will become obvious. In this desert that is today's material life, they will at last find their true path.
