Whispers from The Brighter World

What you all call beauty is not important. It is, insofar as it emanates the kindness and light of the person's soul.

Your criteria for beauty are very haphazard and so different according to the races – you have no idea!

Never mind appearances, see only what is reflected on a face and comes from the heart.

With time, a true spiritual work not only transforms a being in depth, it also changes one's expression. Even if nature did not favour the person at first, their inner beauty can illuminate their features and render them beautiful.

Physical beauty is short-lived, what remains is only the soul's beauty and the luminosity it manages to show.

Look for it, if it is not apparent – this beauty in your brothers and sisters. Only this counts, the rest returns to dust.

All is but illusion in matter.

Train your eye to detect the treasures hidden in certain incarnate beings who do not attract your gaze in the least.

A gemstone can hide in the heart of a rock you call a geode.

That is just an image meant to make you realize that, very often, you rely on appearances. You can be sorely mistaken and let yourself be misled in your judgements.

Try to capture what emanates from the hearts of your fellow beings, without limiting yourselves to their faces; this will be wise on your part.
