The tiredness caused on you by these messages makes you not really realize their importance. They express ideas which a Living Master cannot say or write. We have put forward rather powerful arguments in the previous collection. How could your Master have said that? We must proceed carefully in the approach of certain truths, so as to not shock you. The remarks of my son, even though moderate and well thought out, are often distorted. The abhyasis delude themselves and they spread falsehoods, as it has happened before and after the celebrations. We must be very careful; in spite of that, people become heated, often wrongly; they make up groundless stories.

'This is another human characteristic. They start with a piece of information, a sentence, a word, sometimes, to extrapolate and imagine that which does not exist. You must be vigilant about all these rumours, which disturb many of you if they are spread and amplified. Man is imaginative; if it's in the right direction, it is a quality, but one should avoid going too far. This is evidenced by the circumstances we have just mentioned. Remain careful, get confirmation of your sources from reliable people and all will be well."
