Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, July 28, 1999 – 10:00 a.m.

Remain calm; you have sufficient resources in you to face up to things. Since the beginning of time, there have always been tragedies. Some of them are in the order of things, that is to say, of divine order: creation, destruction, as well as other destructions caused by humans. The Earth stands at an intermediate level of evolution in comparison to all the other planets. Certain individuals believe they are geniuses, and they make discoveries, sometimes prodigious, but they use them wrongly. What should help humanity can also destroy it. As long as this planet remains at this level, one will have to expect that it will undergo this kind of fate. Poor Earth, poor fellows, those who did not do anything to arrive at this will be on a par with the others.

It is necessary to keep a glimmer of hope for a better future here below. After many upheavals, people will turn to the essential goal; this is what we hope for the majority of them.

Remain well focused on your personal work. It will forbid anxiety and despair for the remainder of your life.

Some will return to us, more quickly than envisaged; it will be a grace for them.

They will finish their remaining work in another way.

Be in utmost surrender. Don't forget that you must set an example in this area.
