Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, May 19, 2015 — 10:00 a.m.

There will always be something to say; repetition, as we have said many times, is the very principle of life on Earth. The Mission is in some sense entering a new era; it will thus adapt itself quite naturally in the future to what will prevail in this world. What matters is to work from day to day to achieve the best — in oneself, around oneself and for the multitude. The egregore of our spiritual way is both expanding and becoming stronger; it will mark these times and will leave traces very far into the future. This world is bound to go through substantial changes; nothing is immutable here below. Human beings also change. Imperceptibly their cells are adapting to subtle vibrations that are not yet perceived by researchers. Highly evolved beings are feeling this and adapting in their own manner to these necessary changes. The human being has changed so much through these incredible journeys. The caveman, as he is called, would be astounded in the face of this metamorphosis, and it is not over yet. What matters is the present time. One must hold onto it and enjoy what is offered now — the possibilities are great in every respect.

"Let us revert to this beautiful Mission of Sahaj Marg. It is supported by so many of our abhyasis; whether they are incarnate or not, they continue to work for the good of all. The Masters, too, are particularly attentive to the path of Sahaj Marg, which has been desired by the higher powers. Thus, all is well, under our blessings."
