Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, November 22, 2015 — 10:00 a.m.

Acceptance is necessary and decisive on this Earthly journey where everything is counted and evaluated according to criteria that are beyond human reasoning. The complexity of life is great — boundless, one might say. A human being must be content to do his or her best and learn as much as possible through personal experience and the multiple tests associated with it. Good moments are precious breaks; they are strengthening and allow one to have a more objective view of all that must be experienced. Embarking upon a spiritual path opens up prospects that would otherwise have remained ignored. Developing love within oneself — a love that truly elevates the soul a long way from all the depravity of this world — is a promising life choice. It is a valuable asset. Even if it is not easily assessed, it produces the best results in this kind of process.

"Repetition is necessary, as evidenced by these messages. We revert to the same topics for good reason; the human being quickly forgets and moves on, as you say. In this case, the topic is different. It is good to immerse oneself each day in these values that are not fabricated and that are decisive in one's incarnation. From one lifetime to the next, experiences occur that add good or bad aspects to the karma of each person. Everything is justified, you can be sure. The objective here is to advance towards the goal, for the best of reasons. We wish the best to each and every one in their personal aspiration."
