Whispers from The Brighter World

You can rest easy on this point too, all is clear and in order concerning the finances of the Mission. The association fees and numerous donations are not used by the Master. They are invested in acquisitions to satisfy the abhyasis, and in the maintenance of these properties.

It is important to have places for them that are a haven of peace, where their faith can be expressed. Brotherhood can develop there, in addition to the practice.

Group meditations are of great importance, divine energy concentrates there differently. Practising alone at home is another aspect of sadhana. All that we propose serves a noble cause: to develop in the practitioner a high level of receptivity, which leads them to an exemplary practice.

Our goals are noble and irreproachable in the eyes of reasonable and sensible people.

To give the world a simple means of getting in tune with the Divine Source, that is our prime objective. Humans, on their part, aren't always clear about theirs. What can we do about it?

We do not hold onto anyone. Aspirants try the practice and, if they so wish, can continue.

What could be simpler and more open? Don't let yourself be unsettled by unjustified criticisms; time will place once again, in their true context, our spiritual priorities. They will be of great help to humans of tomorrow, even more than to those of today.
