Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, March 12, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

You absolutely must gain confidence in yourself and accept this special correspondence from my son. Isn't it simpler that way?

Nevertheless, I would still need to be certain he is aware of this exchange. Please make sure, both of you, that I get objective proof and then I'll agree without batting an eyelid.

You know we don't want to rush you, but you have to make an effort to adapt to the situation. My son is overworked, he spends his life writing letters, so try to simplify his life – you can understand that.

We're making progress on another point: 'prophecies'. You can't check the accuracy of what we say, and here too you find yourself in a tricky situation.

It's a question of habit, and you'll get used to it, believe me. I went through the same moments of uncertainty when I received disconcerting messages.

The human mind fears the unknown – it's a normal reaction, you have to trust us. Moreover, these prophecies will be known after you, so what are you risking?

You have been chosen for your gifts and also because you are a well-balanced person, so be at peace on this point and all will be well.
