Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, March 13, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

Your spiritual work cannot solve everything. You all must be vigilant and make efforts to correct what can curb your progress.

A well-conducted sadhana, with all the necessary perseverance, will support the work of the Master. You must take part in this spiritual realization you are aspiring to. It's not enough to sit down quietly and say, "It is the Master who does everything." He does it up to a certain point, but you must actively participate in this work. Open your eyes – what can be obtained easily? In this area, more than anywhere else, your active participation is important.

You all settled into a moral comfort, which consists in thinking that you are irreproachable, that only others have to make efforts. Don't believe a word of it. You are your own enemies. Sharpen your sense of observation, be lucid and constantly track the roots of certain habits, so established that they are concealed from your sight.

There comes a moment on your journey when you must question yourselves, with the greatest humility, in order to set out again, lightened of your main limitations.
