Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, March 17, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

Don't pause at the way my son responds to the receipt of our messages. What is essential for you to know is that he appreciates them. They make him happy and support him in his task, which is sometimes very heavy. He thanks you all, in his own way and not just with sentences lined up on paper. You have to accept his style for what it is, bearer of his gratitude.

My son is alone in facing the many difficulties that loom in front of him. He has to try to solve various problems – often caused, it must be said, by unconscious human beings. It's hard for him to intervene as a redresser of wrongs. Wisdom is not easy to achieve, and the road to reach it is long. Spiritual practice does not solve all things, and immediately. We continually come back to human behaviour, so disconcerting and inevitable.

Let's continue to help my son, thanks to this means which, even if it doesn't give him precise instructions, orients him in certain circumstances and supports him.

Babuji

My Beloved Master is right, and my heart expresses all its gratitude to him and to all of you for the help these messages give me. I can't describe to you in human terms what they represent, but please know they are a very precious help, which has become vital for me.

May his blessings be upon us all.
