Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, March 26, 2001 – 8:00 a.m.

My dear son, protect yourself more. The abhyasis do not imagine the responsibilities that weigh upon you. Your role should be limited largely to spiritual work. You do not need to enter into their personal affairs, which they must deal with themselves, supported by their sadhana.

Be firm on this point. Your health is more precious than anything that gravitates around questions concerning our aspirants' material life. They must grow and take responsibility for themselves. Our method must make them strong in all aspects of their lives. Organize your own so as to spare yourself. You must be able to continue your work in all parts of the globe where it is necessary.

My dear son, your mission is heavy but glorious, your footsteps illuminate the ground where you walk. You are great and are accomplishing that which you came for. Do not lose heart. Even if you don't realize the greatness of your mission, it is of utmost importance. All your undertakings are judicious; they are part of a long-planned design.

Certain obstacles cause delays, but what does it matter. All that must be, will be. Keep courage and confidence in yourself and in us.
