Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, May 22, 2005 – 10:00 a.m.

Humility: this is the key and you have understood this for a long time, my child. Without it, there is no greatness; your Master is a touching example of this, giving it its true dimension. Nothing lasting can be built without this primordial aspect. Our way will also set an example for those who will perpetuate our original teaching, without adding any trait of their own personality to it – something that has nothing to do with it.

The Masters chosen as our successors will have the mission to preserve the very essence of this teaching, which is more than enough for its efficacy. These messages will be the quintessence of it for many hearts sufficiently refined and capable of detecting in them an emanation of the Divine, beyond their particular form of expression not yet recognized by all in this world. Those hearts will also be capable of respecting the original spirit while working for the future. That future will be characterized by respect for the truth and elimination of the trends of the day – trends no longer having a place in a purified environment, one that focuses on the essential, to which existential questions will be brought back. Our way will remain vigilant on its attributions, protecting itself from prevailing currents of thought, inherent in a troubled period where humans vainly seek in sophisticated formulas what exists within themselves: the reality of a divine presence, obscured for too long. There lies the challenge: to have the humility to rely, in everything, on the divine presence and to seek it intensely, that is what frees one's mind from its fantasies and brings it back to a very simple and constructive vision of spiritual reality.
