Whispers from The Brighter World

Friday, May 4, 2001 – 8:00 a.m.

Be wary of any judgement; be vigilant on this point. Reactions like this are spontaneous among most humans.

Do you see perfection in yourselves? If so, you are high-level sages. It would rather seem, after thorough analysis, that your sense of critical judgement is constantly on the alert and ready to exert itself at the slightest thing related to others.

Try to re-focus this sustained attention on yourselves, with greatest objectivity, and by so doing, your need to analyse, weigh and judge will be satisfied.

You will all progress through a constructive work that will enable you to be more tolerant towards your brothers and sisters.

We insist on this important point: you are and will be judged by the same measures you are using for others. Do not forget it.

It would be good, while advancing in sadhana, to remove the obstacles obstructing your way. You should not be held back by behaviours that are no longer consistent with your spiritual realization and the goal you all wish to reach.

Be vigilant; do not let yourselves get slowed down by reactions you can avoid. Nothing is impossible to the willing aspirant who is very determined to see his or her quest through to the end. It is up to you to decide and act accordingly.
