Whispers from The Brighter World

Friday, May 4, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

We are not righters of wrongs; such is not our objective on this path. However, in order to support the elevation of each one of you, we have to draw your attention to certain aspects of your personality – for your good, not to make you feel guilty.

Let's be clear in this area, we only wish to help you all. When you have managed to overcome some of your personality traits, you feel a glow of satisfaction. You feel lighter, more serene; even if you have to relapse, your effort has borne fruit. We have all gone through this search for perfection and we are well placed to understand you.

Human nature is complex. People are conditioned by so many acquired elements, against which they must show their full vigilance in order to go towards the wisdom they yearn for. They would like to be perfect and worthy; they very often believe themselves to be so, and this feeling reassures them. They feel stronger in the face of adversity. The struggle they must conduct is touching; it is in this that we want to help.

All of us here have the same goal: to conduct this fight, to help our brothers and sisters in their quest, to support them and, above all, to love them.

Our solicitude is great and so is our compassion. A day will come when universal harmony will reign for the happiness of all beings, wherever they may be.
