Saturday, May 5, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

Spare yourself my child. Your willingness makes you go beyond your strength; your desire to serve is strong, but be reasonable, you must. Your mediumship weakens you and it adds to all your health problems.

The comparison you made this morning to the 'Unfinished Symphony' of this great musician is right with regard to form. The whole of these messages indeed constitutes a kind of symphony, which will remain unfinished time-wise, because we will have to interrupt it when the time comes, without its outpouring being definitively concluded by the word 'end'. It will continue in your hearts; it is in them that the sequel to these messages will be written, and it will know no end.

All of you, our faithful aspirants, are becoming adults spiritually. You free yourselves from the mass of humans; you are dehumanizing yourselves in the noblest sense of the term.

Your soul quality and your thoughts place you above these low vibrations, whose effects you flee. They are raging in more places than one and your inner condition causes you to feel them. You all aspire to purity, to the harmony that emerges around you, whether it emanates from a place or a soul. Some souls display a radiance that touches your hearts; you feel better and more inspired through their contact.

Be happy to belong to this minority that is preparing the glorious future of our Mission and this planet.

Babuji