Whispers from The Brighter World

Friday, May 18, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

We are satisfied. Not only is the harvest abundant in terms of the writings accumulated, but we can assess their effects on the privileged few who have access to them. The test results are largely conclusive, to adopt the vocabulary fashionable in your world, where everything is subjected to tests, competitive examinations and other means of selection.

The circumstances were such – and they were not due to pure coincidence as you imagine – that this selection took place. Each one of you must become a beacon – what you receive must be reflected back to the people around you. There is no shortage of means: each of you has your own personality and can express yourself accordingly.

Hasn't it been said that "One's light should not be hidden under a bushel"?

You should firstly assimilate this knowledge and imbibe it before passing it on.

Everything in its own time. When the moment is ripe, inspiration will come and will make you act spontaneously.

Continue to nourish yourselves with these messages. You won't always keep to yourselves what has been acquired, it will know how to manifest itself.

When the harvest has flowered in your hearts, its scent will be uncontainable; its fragrance will go wherever it pleases. You yourselves will be captivated by it and all will be well.
