Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, May 27, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

In response to your daily prayer: you are serving us faithfully. What more could you do in your current life circumstances? We are trying, in these unusually difficult days, to infuse some poetry into these writings and to put a balm on your heart.

We care for you – isn't that natural? We are not as far from this world as you all think. Your ordeals concern us, but what can we do concretely, except to make your living conditions easier, to alleviate your sorrows and your sufferings, whether they be physical or moral.

Your karma must be settled and you all have to see it through to the end. Ours was not easy on this Earth, we were spared nothing. We know all the human reactions, you are not isolated cases. The human mind is predictable; we can perceive it in its least impulses.

Divest yourselves of the useless, do not slow down your progress – succeeding is your challenge.

Plunge ever deeper in yourselves in the conquest of the ineffable, the impalpable, the Divine. In this most sacred of places, the culmination of your efforts will find its reward.
