This sentence, which you didn't like, has been softened, it has been properly edited; our thoughts are respected, it is correct, but see what your friends are proposing. By and large, you convey well all that we want to express, but it is not about dictation, and when sentences are long, that is not always easy for you. It is about receiving what we say, and transcribing it as well as possible.

"Channelling is an unconventional phenomenon and thus difficult to be understood by those who are not blessed with it. Rest reassured; you are doing a good job. This kind of small difficulty is inevitable, especially given your capacity of energy and the current problem of health, which hinders you. We are grateful to you to put your strength and your courage at our disposal.

"My dear child, don't be in self-doubt, the reception is good. As for the repetitions which often bother you, they are useful; you are not in a traditional literary context. In the books of the Mission, in the speeches, there are very many, but who complains about them? If this is the only thing abhyasis see when reading us, they do it with their mind and not with their heart.

"All this being said, it is normal to endeavour to comply with the French language and spelling. Do not tire yourself with these details, you do the main things; let your precious assistants do their part. Be patient for all that worries you in this moment, you are advancing; that's the main thing."
