No, God cannot weary of hearing you saying to Him: 'I love You'. What else can be said? The best we can give Him is love. He does not need anything more; He is everything, in everything and gives us everything. We owe Him our possessions as well as our gifts. Even the coat belonging to the poor beggar is owed to Him. The life of this being is hard, but it was necessary for his evolution. So were you also, probably, since we go through all the states likely to make us jettison our samskaras and break this hard gangue, which surrounds us.

"Our love, that's all He expects: the complete openness of this heart, which He prepares throughout all these incarnations, to shape it to His image and to make fusion take place completely. You can repeat to Him tirelessly that you love Him, He is happy to hear it. Human's love is the only food He needs. It is the privileged relationship which each one of us can have with Him: you should never forget it and you should open the gates of your heart wide so that love can keep growing therein and it can be immersed completely in His."
