Saturday, November 6, 1999 - 8:30 a.m.

"As regards the issue that bothers you, we will try to foster an easier way of transmission. Do not torment yourself with that, we insist much on this point. You have enough problems already.

"You see the paradox: it is easier for you to communicate with the beyond than with my son. Let us leave him to his sorrow for the moment and let him recover from this state of mourning.

"Then, he will throw himself into his work and will travel for the development of the Mission. My joy would be that his wanderings would bring him to Montpellier and that a true meeting would take place between you. Yes, my child, let us dream. Dreams can translate into positive facts. It is necessary to try, in any case, and wait and see.

"In some respects you are similar, which does not make things any easier.

"We will resume later."
