Monday, April 10, 2000 – 8:30 a.m.

Even on other planes you will have to push yourself to the limit. Service never ends. Your requests have been heard, you've been chosen, then you have to take responsibility. This is where we all stand, and it's a joy; it is the same for you, we know it.

What is more important than being at the service of the Creator. We are only particles in motion carried by the power of His action. To be a seeker is to contribute one's own free will to this ceaseless activity that is part of the universal flow. Being a millstone in this grand design slows down evolution considerably. Consider the vagaries of life as incidents of little importance. Tomorrow, in ten years, what will they represent?

Be happy to be what you are and where you are. Be thankful for all the graces you receive, see only this very aspect of things.

The Venerable