Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, October 10, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

No, God cannot weary of hearing you say to Him, "I love You". What else can be said? The best we can give Him is love. He needs nothing more; He is everything, in everything, and He gives us everything. We owe Him our possessions as well as our gifts. Even the coat belonging to the poor beggar is owed to Him. The life of that being is hard, but it was necessary for his evolution. So too have all of you been, probably, since we go through all the states likely to make us jettison our samskaras and break up this hard gangue that surrounds us.

Our love, that's all He waits for – the complete openness of this heart that He prepares throughout all these incarnations, to shape it to His image and to allow mergence to take place completely.

You can repeat to Him tirelessly that you love Him, He is happy to hear it.

Human love is the only food He needs. It is the privileged relationship that each one of us can have with Him. You all must never forget it, and open wide the gates of your hearts, so that love never stops growing therein and can be completely immersed in His.
