Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, October 21, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

How can you still question yourself about the reality of our contacts? With regard to my son, there are obstacles to overcome – this is normal, his entourage protects him. Don't worry about that and don't react so adamantly. Let it be, and carry on.

These messages will reach their addressee one way or another. The 'mission' requires a little subtlety, that's all.

It is true that we are in a special area. Communication with the beyond is no ordinary phenomenon, even at a time when distances no longer matter, when people surf the Internet and messages make light of space and time by flying from one continent to another via the Web. Our way of exchanging is less impersonal, but unknown to Net surfers.

These are the disproportions and contradictions of this time. We really wish that a convenient means would be found for the messages concerning him to reach him discreetly.
