Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, October 28, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

Congratulations! A new era has begun. It's good to live with the times. You all put up with the drawbacks of modern life, why not benefit from its advantages. Follow the example of my son, who uses all the advanced techniques with ease.

You have made a good decision, which will make your life easier.

The coming century will move forward in discovery and bring a technology such as you all can't imagine. Human beings will be both beneficiaries and victims. In many areas, their presence will no longer be necessary, hence serious crises on the social level. There's a flip side to every coin; you all can already see the signs of it, but there's no going back. Since the beginning of time, humans have had to come to terms with evolution in all areas. Decried, since it is always inhumane in some way, evolution is inevitable.

The best thing is to accept and to make the most of it; I would have adapted also, at least I think so! I was rather against all these new things that came and disrupted habits, but one has to get used to them.

As far as we're concerned, I won't ask you to capture these messages on computer. The quality of our contact would suffer from it, so let's not innovate too much, and for the moment keep this delicious intimacy in its present form.
