Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, November 1, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

Since you too are asking for it, let us continue. You might consider that you have put in enough effort and want to call it a day; we would understand it quite well, but you are not in the habit of giving up.

On this All Saints' Day, think of all those beings who have led outstanding lives, who distinguished themselves in different fields, but always because the only force guiding them, driving them forward, was God.

What could be more beautiful than serving God, devoting one's life to Him, setting an example and standing as a model for those who take them as guides and beacons.

By their edifying lives, these beings have left landmarks for those who need them.

Your preferred saint has influenced your life since your youth and still serves as a point of reference to you. So, on this day, it is right for you to have grateful thoughts for all these beings who, recognized as saints or not, have enlightened humanity.

You all have something good in you, do not repress it, let it express itself, and above all share it with others; there is so much to do. Open your eyes and get down to work for the love of Him.
