Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, November 9, 1999 – 10:00 a.m.

When seeds are sown, each of them sprouts and develops differently – some more quickly than others, some more properly than others – yet looking at the whole crop, the sower can be satisfied; the whole has benefited from his or her good care and the result is visible.

The heat of the sun can warm the seedling most sensitive to the cold, the most fragile one, and turn it into a tall and beautiful plant. The more its heart opens to the beneficial rays of love, the more the Creator will lean over it with tenderness. Some will resist all care, all attempts to help them, and wither away, lonely and disillusioned. He will have to be patient and wait, sometimes a very long while, before arriving at the optimal result.

You all understand what we are driving at. You yourselves have realized that surrender to God and a heart open to His love are your major assets; you act as is proper and you look in the right direction. You are on track, and you will reach the destination. Be blessed.
