Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, November 30, 1999 – 7:30 a.m.

We will be brief today. My son is happy, our 'ambassador' has successfully fulfilled his mission. We couldn't have made a better choice; in the various areas where we call on him, he is right at home. Not only does he express himself perfectly, but he also knows how to touch hearts.

Your Master will set off again and continue his tour in Europe. He is very satisfied, all is going well. This visit, once again, is important. With regard to his travels, he makes choices according to priorities.

It isn't a question of pleasing this or that person or country. His motivations are of a higher order and must not be interpreted, as some among you do.

A Master's life is not aligned with the usual mundane formalities. He does his work and bases his activities on other criteria.

Your children-in-heart will remember this meeting, yet even so, they cannot assess its full scope.
