Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, December 2, 1999 – 10:00 a.m.

Lao-Tze was right: love triumphs over all. Love is the best that human beings can receive or give. Nothing good, nothing important, humanly speaking, can be done without love. You can all cultivate it in yourselves; let it grow to the extent that all your cells are imbued with it.

If you act, if you fight for a good cause, and if love guides you, you can only succeed.

Sooner or later, your efforts will bear fruit. Look at the example of the Mission, how far we've come in twenty years; it is small compared to eternity, but what a result!

Love is of the divine essence, its vibration is powerful; it represents a force that none of you can suspect. That of the atom is powerful too, but it can be terribly devastating. Love is a creative form, unique; it is sublime.

It is a divine gift, the importance of which incarnate human beings are starting to realize; this notion does not reach its apogee on the Earth, it prepares you all in this life to perceive it, magnificent, on other planes.
