Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, December 4, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

The universe is populated with planets, some of which are inhabited. It is in these places that your evolution continues.

These are different forms of life, undetectable by Earthlings in the current state of their knowledge. Fortunately, their technology has serious limitations; all these forays into space are sufficiently dangerous and harm a certain equilibrium. Their mania for exploring and conquering will not stop by itself. A time will come when it will be necessary to put an end to this kind of conquest, as the means being used are devastating. Humans want to play at being the conqueror of space; they believe they are alone on planet Earth, which is in fact under high surveillance. Such terrible human tragedies take place there – of greater and greater magnitude – without any effective means being envisaged to truly remedy them.

What would humans go and do on other planets if not reproduce the same patterns, the same social misery that all the while is dramatically spreading on Earth. They have reached an extreme of excess; we can only note these sad facts.
