Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, December 16, 1999 – 10:00 a.m.

On Earth, Sulochana did not doubt these messages, but she was a little like you, waiting for evidence. What she has told you this morning is very beautiful and concerns her relationship with my son.

For us, the situation is different; if scarcity makes the beauty of a thing, that does not apply to this series of writings. We must benefit from the opportunity we are given to gather as many of them as possible while conditions allow for it.

We expect much from you and we subject you to a kind of pressure that you accept heartily, even if your body rebels sometimes. This capacity for communicating with us, as you are doing, is a true grace and you consider it as such.

It isn't given to everyone, which makes it difficult to understand. There will always be sceptics, and not only for that. God is so ignored; religions have done much in this direction. God is universal and in each one of us, but one still has to have the good fortune to discover Him and then to Love Him.
