Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, December 18, 1999 – 10:00 a.m.

The ancient writings underwent transformations over the course of centuries by human alterations and deletions. In no religion are the documents presented today entirely what the originals were. In every era, certain people believed themselves to be inspired and made the modifications that suited them.

One will have to be very wary of that with regard to what we have written. Our books must not meet with the same fate; they are not testimonies from this or that individual, but our own writing. Even if it has to take time, we hope that one day these messages will be brought to the attention of those wanting to accept them. There too, we hope that beings believing themselves to be superior and claiming to follow their inspiration will not come along and make cuts and suppress what they deem inappropriate.

These writings are to be taken as they are; we insist often enough on this point, knowing the whimsical minds of people and their often surprising assessments.
