Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, January 3, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

If we take stock at the start of this year, we can see that many topics have been treated and we have come back to the same ones a certain number of times, out of necessity.

One has to know when to stop. All of you have enough food for thought with what has been stored. You can go back – a second reading will get you to discover what may have escaped you the first time.

That's how the development of comprehension can be measured.

If you put into practice the advice we have given you, you will all realize the distance travelled.

With your sadhana, all the written books and these messages, you have a solid foundation that gives your Master's work every opportunity to bear fruit.

Go forward boldly, spare no effort; you are working for yourselves, keep that in mind. It is you who will reap the outcome of your efforts.
