Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, January 6, 2000 – 8:00 a.m.

Life is a gift, it should be appreciated until the end. It is an opportunity given to human beings to enable them to advance. If it's well understood in that sense, it is the best means at their disposal, and their evolution must go through this repetitive cycle. What you all are doing and will be doing with it can raise you to the heights. Your destiny is all mapped out in advance, but your free will can make you take roundabout routes, and sometimes even lead you astray.

Having a good guide should spare you this kind of pitfall.

Trials are to be taken as blessings. That isn't easy to admit and to live, considering them this way.

The path of saintliness is long and trying in every respect. It can't be followed by everyone.

Each one reacts differently and does what they can. God is great and His mercy is infinite. He knows human weakness and lifts up the person who is down, who implores His help.
