Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, July 27, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

From the most powerful to the weakest, everyone has their place and role to assume. Everything is there in this world; it is a breeding ground where the various species live side by side, support each other, kill each other or, in the best cases, help each other.

Differences are useful in the divine plan where each nature can exercise its talents, develop qualities and exorcise fears and vices by going to the extreme in horror. These beings will then be able, one day, here or in another incarnation, to ascend towards the light and, with time, rid themselves of this heavy carapace that grips them tightly.

Feel sorry, all of you, for those souls who are still caught up in such turbulences.

Pray that the light will one day shine for them.

Be happy for having reached this stage where you start climbing the staircase of perfection. Reaching the first step is itself an achievement, in view of the path already taken.

Be compassionate with those who are still in the clutches of evil and who are struggling like wretches when they become aware of their situation and cannot get out of it.

Try to understand them, whoever they may be; have compassion.

You do not know where you come from, so cultivate tolerance at all costs. It is a key quality; it can only serve your own evolution.
