Whispers from The Brighter World

Friday, May 6, 2005 – 10:00 a.m.

This work, the product of your efforts, will bear fruit in hearts. Many will be receptive to this discourse, stripped of superfluity and in accordance with their own journey. Reaching hearts doesn't require the intricacies of intellect, indulging in a certain complexity. Our purpose lies elsewhere; it aims to elevate the Soul, finding within the seeker a climate conducive for its expansion.

To bring one back to simplicity, to plainness, far from the many trappings of an artificial life where each one must prove oneself and come to terms with oneself one way or the other – there is the difficulty. This journey on Earth is short; humans must make the most of it in order to foster their progression on the way to wisdom. We choose this means to touch our brothers and sisters, most of whom are grappling with the complexity of life, to try to bring them back to a more accurate appreciation of things.

The most affluent can lose everything in an instant: health, or property that is material or emotional. Nothing is permanent, and they lose sight of this. Nothing is forever, especially not this life on Earth, although they seem to forget this in many circumstances.

They fight to secure their social position; this is within the norm, provided they don't harm their fellow human being, which is often the case. To develop oneself while respecting others is praiseworthy, and there are so many possible ways that do not impede the conventions relating to divine laws.

We don't want to be moralisers. Humanity struggles in this world – in a mindless jungle where the multitude externalize all the negativity that encumbers them – in order to reach another way of being, more in line with a higher reality.
