Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, October 21, 2003 – 10:00 a.m.

We understand your weariness, but try to continue a little longer, for the love of us.

How can we tell you that this work will not remain useless and that it will be appreciated by our brothers and sisters? This reading will bring them something other than our books, a spiritual nourishment that comes from higher planes of consciousness and that will touch them differently.

We know it, everything has already been said in these messages, but these repetitions have their raison d'être. Keep faith in what you're doing and especially in us, who motivate you to accomplish this daily work.

The number of our abhyasis is increasing; they are very different from one another and they don't approach their spiritual journey in the same way. Many aspire to return to more simplicity, to interiorize themselves and go beyond the great existential questions, in order to return to the source and forget themselves in it, leaving the intellect aside, to see only the essential.

Their thirst for God is great and justifies this need to surrender in trust to the Master they have chosen and to the teaching that is given on our path. They understand that this approach must help them divest themselves of the useless, of endless reasoning, so as to return to a simplicity of heart, which alone can open the doors to true knowledge, beyond complicated formulas that by no means will give them that peace to which they aspire. They wish to comply with the divine laws, and to do so, sweep away the useless clutter in their minds, to hear their own truth, that which they hold within themselves and which will lead them to wisdom.
