Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, January 28, 2004 – 10:00 a.m.

A soul divested of the useless, progressing towards perfection, does not burden itself anymore with superfluous formulas and words. The evidence leads it and motivates it; the language of the heart is enough for it, it no longer burdens itself with grand philosophical theories which, in its view, are devoid of interest. This attitude is a result of a long journey; after having wandered in vain, from life to life, moving from one teaching to another, all the light has finally dawned. Love becomes its only food, supported by signs emanating from the Divine and inspired for the purpose of providing an essential accompaniment to its blossoming.

Ultimately, it all comes down to the greatest simplicity. The approach to God is made in paring down, which is indispensable to the needs of the soul, given its necessity to self-reflect and to love, above all.

The way to that achievement has been difficult and very long. So many wanderings, fruitless mistakes, so much suffering, before reaching the divine source, where it can finally drink.

Praise never ceases, it exults, delighted to return to its homeland, where no disappointment can occur. It's good to know that such a journey culminates in the purest joy. No effort is in vain. In this field, everything is counted, scrupulously. What can one hide from the Creator of everything? He is within us. His essence dwells in us and nourishes us according to our needs and our aspirations. It's but for us to make sure that this nourishment divinizes the Soul, at the pinnacle of universal conception. May all souls reach this sublime apotheosis.
