Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, April 27, 2004 – 10:00 a.m.

Let your soul drink from the divine source; it is insatiable, how could it be otherwise!

For a long time now, it has chosen its path, that of love, the only one that suits it and doesn't disappoint it. Love's resources are infinite; it unites the souls that offer themselves to it, showering them with graces. No equivalent exists in this world, it neither misleads nor disappoints; it brings together, it creates unity and it inspires valiant hearts, adorning them with celestial attire, recognizable to informed eyes.

Divine laws manifest themselves for all, no matter whether a person is open to their prerogatives or not. They act for the good of each one, sometimes in a way which humans deem painful. These principles are inescapable. We often revert to their effects, whose causes we couldn't exactly define without delving into the complexity of the system of successive reincarnations, indispensable to evolution.

Admitting this necessity entails taking a big step forward in the acceptance of these laws and no longer hindering their functioning with a negative attitude. To follow a spiritual path is to open up to knowledge, to its manifestations, which are revealed over time in a more comprehensible light. The way is long, it requires patience and perseverance. Ordeals are numerous, they should not discourage anyone.

The most convinced seeker can weaken when life seems unbearable in particularly painful circumstances, before he or she manages to overcome them. This is where grace comes into play, allowing one to see in a nobler light what had seemed insurmountable.

Acceptance elevates the soul. Life is a hard school constantly knocking each one and instructing for their good. May all our brothers and sisters understand this, no one can escape it, and may our blessings strengthen them.
