Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, September 5, 2004 – 11:00 a.m.

Look back and see the road you have travelled; this observation will encourage you to continue with even more fervour. It's good for the aspirant to make an assessment of this kind.

Until the end, it's necessary to hold one's course and not lose sight of the final destination. Let your heart be reassured, all is well. It's enough to continue on your way with the same hope and the same faith in what you do. Love must guide you, as always; it's part of your life, it's second nature. It ensures complete success; whether inborn or acquired in this incarnation, this propensity to love is the mark of the divine seal, transcending any spiritual process. Let your heart open more and more, it's never too big to receive the benefits, which are inestimable in worldly terms but count more than anything else. They ensure perpetuity for the rest of the journey, wherever it may be, on the other side of the shore. Once this incarnation is over, the journey will continue in other places, preserving what it has managed to acquire, particularly in regard to spiritual assets. We never cease to encourage our brothers and sisters to not slacken their efforts, they are worth the fruits that result.

Each day offers an opportunity to act, and above all to do it well. A well-led sadhana helps to surmount the obstacles, the ordeals and the sorrows that occur in every life.

To look to one's Master means not losing sight of the goal. Whatever the strength of the storm, the essential will be preserved. The harshness of this existence on Earth should not discourage our brothers and sisters, they are on the path, they are helped, supported and blessed, whatever may happen.
