Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, October 22, 2005 – 10:00 a.m.

My daughter, be less demanding on yourself. The schedule of this ritual can become more flexible if necessary. You manage your life with rigour, but it's imperative that you take into account your current possibilities and don't go beyond them in the spirit of service. You've been following us with courage for a long time; wisdom demands that you should take care of yourself, and so we ask this of you.

Stay focused on the heart's availability, on being attentive to its aspirations, in the most varied contexts. Live your spirituality intensely; don't curb its expansion, devote all your attention to it, time has come for that. Whether you no longer receive us as regularly as before is not a problem. So many pages have been written, and that is more than enough to satisfy our readers' needs. These many pages, without exception, carry a message requiring all their attention. Humanity is heading for very hard times and our brothers and sisters must fortify themselves for this prospect. Spiritual life, to some extent, reassures humans about their future. It gives them a broader vision of their lives, of the need to incarnate in order to achieve the desired goal, prompting them to be more rigorous towards themselves, with more tolerance towards others.

Reaching a high level of consciousness requires perseverance and self-sacrifice; greatness of soul cannot be acquired on command, it must be earned through ceaseless effort. Everything in creation is subjected to this principle. Humans want to be the most evolved; it is up to them to show it, with the help of divine grace.
