Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, May 12, 2002 – 10:00 a.m.

Why do you think we glorify Love, the Love that doesn't change? Because it is not of this world and it has no equivalent here.

Human beings have only this reference to rely on, this reality that they cannot feel or evaluate to its true extent, hence their dismay in many circumstances.

Life on this Earth is not reassuring; nothing is settled, everything can be lost in an instant – a dear one, a material asset – everything changes and transforms as time goes by. They are part of this movement and they themselves follow it, fluctuating as they do in their feelings and attachments.

The only constant in their lives is the love they receive from their Creator – whether they are aware of this reality or not.

The love they can give Him in return is itself changeable, depending on their mood and the way their lives are evolving. Sometimes tragedies divert them completely from this divine source. They don't accept the trials, those that touch them in the depths of their being. Such trials also have their opposite, the power to awaken in them a feeling of gratitude, which opens wide the path to divine Love.
