Tuesday, March 12, 2002 – 8:00 a.m.

Perfection does not exist in this world. Making efforts to attain it is very commendable.

Knowing oneself well is important to better pinpoint the weak points that are an obstacle to advancement. By recognizing weaknesses, it is easier to track them down, and the aspiration to rise up is therefore only stronger.

The most clear-sighted person seeks to navigate by avoiding pitfalls. He or she remains prudent, trying not to be taken by surprise, and steering their boat skilfully.

This quest for the good is commendable; it strengthens the inner self and facilitates its evolution.

In so doing, each opens secret doors that lead to levels where they can take stock and better run their life. Until the end, each one will be facing this dilemma: did I make a success of my life? Did I take the right direction and make the right choices?

Their questionings can lead them towards a spiritual Master. Henceforth, they know where they want to go. This idea strongly establishes itself on them and their real self is satisfied.

They can finally put down their luggage and entrust their destiny to the Master they chose. They have faith in him and let themselves be guided.

They learn about surrender and feel faith growing in themselves – faith in higher authorities to light their life, and towards whom hitherto they had neglected to turn.

Babuji