Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, January 15, 2004 – 10:00 a.m.

It is not easy for human beings to see themselves as being infinitely small, compared to the whole of creation. Each one is only a pulsation of life, an atom of an extreme smallness, an element of a vibratory mass corresponding to the level of the earth.

Humans are desperately seeking an explanation to the many phenomena that they cannot grasp, not having the appropriate reference marks. They situate themselves with great difficulty, using approximations corresponding to the advances in science, which are not going in the right direction. After all is said and done, these great eternal truths do not impart anything to humans. Would their lives be made easier if they knew them? Would they lead any better this incarnation that doesn't satisfy them? It is not very probable. Having recourse to faith is an invaluable help for those who actually want to go deeper into this quest. Many ways are offered to them for that. Will they be able to commit themselves satisfactorily? In due time, they will eventually find their way, and the Master who is destined for them; this aspect is reassuring. They are not doomed to wander eternally, without finding a solution to their quest. Consciously or not, each has that aspiration; it belongs to them, to their inner being, made of a subtle and indefinable essence which they cannot detect, as it exists beyond matter. The wisest person cannot understand everything. How could they? This smallness mentioned above, restricts them to their potential, which ranks very low on the scale of values. They are small, and so they remain before God, the creator of all things. It rests with each one to work from one incarnation to another, to make themselves worthy of serving Him.
