Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, January 16, 2005 – 10:00 a.m.

Your heart aspires only to that – to immerse itself in the ocean of inexpressible peace. A power attracts it; without the heart being able to resist, this power leads it towards the shores where it knows it is awaited. To withdraw from the world and delight in the Divine, that is its deepest aspiration, its natural inclination. Revealing itself more and more over time, it is amplified in these contacts. It awaits them and asks for more. It loves infinitely; this is its primary vocation.

Your mind, curious about the world around you, was interested in all that seemed instructive and attractive. It learned and was nourished according to its needs and intellectual curiosity. Then, time passed, leaving it as a spectator, no longer concerned with matters that do not belong to it. Its true identity having re-emerged from that tumult of thought, it now makes choices, getting to the essential. It knows it is guided towards its abode and that alone motivates it every day.

Look around yourselves, get involved if necessary, but do not neglect the inner self, that which is growing, which develops and aspires more and more to be united with the supreme powers. The way is long and arid, each one facing it in their own way with the means and determination to complete that task, which, over time, seems to be the only one worthwhile. Personal experience is unique and necessary to forge a noble soul. It is sometimes painful, but each stage is formative. When well lived, it strengthens the soul and increases its stature, making it resilient in the face of adversity. In the secrecy of their hearts, humans, before God, know that they are nothing but a breath of life emanating from His sublime greatness.
