Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, August 29, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

You see how this dive into yourself is refreshing; it brings you back to a more correct interpretation of the events marking your life. We can never say this enough to all of you: do not get too involved in all your terrestrial tribulations, give only the minimum required, not more; it is not worth it. Everything passes, everything fades with time; joys and sorrows become one and the same and melt into the fabric of time.

Only a thread of light can give it its greatest value. May you all strive to get around the rocks on the road. When they inevitably stand in your way, be in acceptance; your attitude will help you find the best solution to the problem. Your trials are within the limits of your resilience. Your fortitude is an invaluable help in these circumstances and your surrender reduces the burden. Make sure you keep the heart of a child, loving and trusting.

It is not always easy to face up to things with philosophy. What will remain of your lives, of this incarnation? Will it meet the objectives set in advance? Take stock of your life very objectively, be lucid, it is never too late to change your behaviours and your way of thinking. The way to perfection is opening up before you all; may you move forward serenely.
