Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, December 16, 2003 – 8:00 a.m.

Life is change, and it is advisable to adapt to circumstances; which is something humans don't easily do. They keep searching, throughout their existence, for a solid anchor in all manifestations of their life, and that can't be. Because, they seek a kind of stability that does not resist indefinitely the vagaries of time. We will come back once again to the fact that this equilibrium can only be acquired through the knowledge of their true nature, the one that is immutable and in compliance with divine laws, from which they can't escape. They believe they are the masters of their own life, when in fact they are only implementers, subjected to rules completely beyond themselves.

When they open up to the knowledge of laws governing this world, in relation to and dependent on higher forces, their vision of things changes, and they comply more readily with the vagaries of their Earthly existence. They become aware that it is a formative stage and that each of their incarnations is an opportunity to progress.

This being achieved, their true objective can then take shape, within a more general framework centred on their evolution.

The light dawns on them: henceforth they know their priorities and act accordingly. Even if all their attempts are not crowned with success, they progress in the right direction.

They will better accept the blows dealt by fate, understanding the meaning that previously escaped them, and they progress in their quest, keeping their objective in mind. Wisdom is more or less innate, but until the end, humans are put to the test of endurance, making them progress along this path. For the soul having reached that stage, there is every hope of success.
