Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, August 2, 2005 – 10:00 a.m.

The heart has its reasons: this is obvious in our comments. To be of service is to demonstrate complete availability. When it is accepted as such, it bears its best fruit.

To be of service is to know how to listen to the call of the heart, even if it is not entirely consistent with one's anticipated plans. Humans make plans, God has other plans, even more so when humans are engaged in a process of service. The divine laws are infinitely subtle; they thwart all attempts that do not comply with them. By accepting this guidance, one progresses in the way of the Spirit while adapting to circumstances, even if they are sometimes disconcerting and not in accordance with expectations. Human beings plan their lives and destiny carves their lives in its own way. Seekers engaged in the path note these differences, and accept them by considering the divine intervention in their journeys.

From life to life, the subtle being is developed with a view to its merging with the Ultimate, hence the need for listening and complete adherence to what an incarnation has in store. The current incarnation has to be considered carefully. Seizing this opportunity is a sign of wisdom and shows the determination of the aspirant to rise. Within our way, all can find the necessary means; these are provided on the condition that one actually becomes aware of the means and works accordingly. We help them, as we do all the brothers and sisters who trust us and expect the best results from their practice. Each one advances at their own pace; they all have their own chance. The ways of God are unfathomable, but they answer a soul's sincere aspiration to rise.
