Whispers from The Brighter World

Friday, March 17, 2000 – 8:30 a.m.

Are you not unconventional in certain aspects of your personality, so why are you so troubled by what is happening to you. You are used to living what few humans experience; what do you fear? To be a victim of your imagination, that is not like you. Would it not be simpler for you to await with trust the events as they unfold. Didn't I once tell you that there were still surprises in store for you; remember, you didn't think of this possibility!

We are convinced that your children-in-heart, for their part, will not be surprised and that they will immediately concur with these comments.

You wish to stand back and wait to see how the situation evolves; we understand that. That you need a little time to get accustomed to it is a positive and wise reaction, your principles being not to confuse dream and reality.

You are not dreaming, my dear daughter; believe that I too had reactions similar to yours in certain circumstances.
