Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, June 12, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

Psychoanalysis is on the wrong track on many points. Without spiritual illumination, it doesn't get to the heart of the being. In each human, there churns a closed world, a kind of city forbidden to external view. People do not necessarily have access to it and have difficulty deciphering signals that are foreign to them, and which psychiatrists interpret according to their own criteria, without succeeding in unravelling the knots. The complexity of this deep nature remains a mystery. Humans manage, sometimes, after dreams or repeated experiences, to seize the true meaning of their life. However open and informed they may be about the secrets of their nature, they will until the end remain an enigma to themselves. They will be able, in the best of cases, to gain some insight that allows them to glimpse reality. This thread will spur them to follow the path of knowledge and to call, in their deepest being, the guide who will be able to lead them towards the Promised Land.
