Tuesday, April 25, 2000 – 8:00 a.m.

The teachings of great beings sent by God, that marked humanity, have been distorted by people. In particular, the teachings of both Jesus and Muhammad, which in the beginning were codes of life, love and respect for one's fellow beings. What has become of it? For centuries, it has given rise to repression, extremist activities and a feeling of guilt maintained among followers, creating a system of material compensation for the maintenance of the respective representatives of those movements. These religions have given, and are still giving, a pretext for all excesses. When will people understand that a unique God governs the universe and that, as such, a piece of this God dwells in them? The challenge to be taken up is to find this sanctuary within themselves. It is enough to seek Him with determination, far from blinding dogmas.

Inspired by an inner wisdom, and really wishing so, one finds the suitable guide for one's profound aspiration.

The Venerable